Briefly explain your opinion

In my opinion, the priorities of private health organisations are often profit rather than ensuring safe and idk

I think a public body is no better or worse than a private organisation both could be beneficial

Think everyone should have some form of training

To be consistent with the idea of nationalised healthcare

Either organisation would provide suitable training

As above

I don't see that it has to be the NHS that supplies the training - especially with budgets so tight just now.

Levels the playing field

Because it isn't essential to the British public it should be funded and managed privately.

Although if there was a private organisation able to provide training to reach an NHS standard accreditation

Makes it more formal

Keep it in the public interest. Private orgs muddy the waters.

I believe it would be a great addition to the NHS and warrants formal training. Factors such as environment

Private expeditions should not fall under NHS remit

Peace of mind for those on the trip

If another qualified organisation could do it , this would take the pressure off the NHS

These are extra-curricular activities and the personal choice of individuals involved. It's perfectly reason

The training and accreditation are the important factors, not the providers of that training.

They should have formal training, probably don't need accreditation.

If someone is practicing medicine in an official capacity they should have a regulated accreditation.

Alright as long as said private org is certified

Help ensure more equitable access to this training and a consistent standard to it that can be regulated rd accessible healthcare. They are all too often owned by the top 1% and used as political ammunitio rent, specific risks and doctors who work worldwide on expeditions or assist other countries during Ir able to expect them to pay privately for training that relates only to their personal activities

International emergencies.
